

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. PREFACE.

PREFACE.

THE accounts printed in the present volume include what remains of the exchequer rolls for the six years running from 1595 to 1600, inclusive. Except that there is no comptroller's account for the year 1600, and that in the year 1597 a receiver-general takes the place of the comptroller, the series is complete in the sense that it comprises for each of these years accounts of all four classes of fiscal officers—comptrollers, bailies ad extra, bailies of burghs, and custumars.

The appendix brings together the entries relating to these years from the responde books of the crown lands and from those of the kirk lands recently annexed to the crown, together with a number of miscellaneous minutes of proceedings in exchequer found written upon the unused leaves of the books in which the respondes are recorded.

I.

The redistribution of the lands from which the old church had been ousted at the time of the Reformation and the many forfeitures incurred in the conflict between the king and the catholic lords during the years covered by this volume brought with them new irregularities in the ingathering of the crown revenues to supplement those which marked the earlier years of King James's reign.[1] The accounts now printed bear frequent traces of the extraordinary changes which at this time affected not only the usual working but also the constitution of the exchequer. The long familiar succession of lords auditors is disturbed. In the comptrollers' accounts of the several years, as hitherto framed, it has been customary to find a record of the sederunt of the lords of checker who sat when the accounts in question were given in and passed. This feature is lacking in the accounts in the present volume. The first comptroller's account in the series bears to have been presented on 1st January 1595, and has the opening words proper to introduce an enumeration of the various present members of the court; but the actual record has not been supplied.[2] The supposition that the preserved copy is an uncompleted draft is excluded by the fact that it bears the signatures[3] of the eight great officers and dignitaries who afterwards became known in the political discussions of the time as the king's octavians. These are the administrators who by a royal commission under the privy seal, granted by King James on the 9th of January 1595–6[4] and ratified by parliament in the following

May,[1] were appointed "to be the lords of his "highness' checker induring all the time and "space of their lifetimes." If a contemporary story told in a letter to the English ambassador, Bowes, be true,[2] their appointment had an interesting origin. On the new year's day of this year the king was, as usual, impecunious, and the queen made him a present of a purse of gold. In doing so, she shook it playfully in his face before she handed it over, and rallied him upon the unbecoming circumstance that her councillors could find money for her, while his, on the contrary, could find none for him. His majesty took the hint, and forthwith made a change in his financial advisers. He appointed by this special commission four of the queen's councillors, namely, Alexander Seton, Lord Urquhart, the president of the court of session; Master John Lindsay, the parson of Menmure; Master James Elphinstone of Innernauchtie, a senator of the college of justice; and Master Thomas Hamilton of Drumcairn, then an ordinary lord of session and afterwards the king's advocate. Along with these were appointed four others, namely, Master David Carnegie of Colluthie, Walter Stewart, prior of Blantyre, the lord privy seal; John Skene of Curriehill, the lord clerk register; and Master Peter Young of Seton, the king's master almoner. The preamble to the commission appointing them is eloquent upon the dilapidated condition of the royal finances. The king's parks and steadings want plenishing, the expenses of keeping the castles are going up, the returns from the customs are going down, the royal palaces are falling into ruin, and "order and "spending within his highness' house is naways "comptrollit and keepit according to the ordinance "of his counsaill and checker, sua that all things "are come to sic confusioun that, after trial ta'en, "it is fundin that there is not wheat nor beir, "silver nor other rent, to serve his highness in "bread and drink, nor otherways." The king gives the fullest powers to the octavians for the remedying of these disorders, and expressly promises in verbo principis that he will not appoint any more commissioners "or obtrude ony ma to "be insert or adjonit to the present commission at "ony time hereafter." No new commission is to be appointed to fill vacancies by death except with consent of the lords auditors. Five of the lords are to form a quorum, and no royal letters touching the disposition of the crown revenues are to receive effect unless they have been first read, heard, allowed, and subscribed by the auditors in council. The octavians, thus constituted, controlled the ingathering of the crown revenue. The accounts now printed corroborate in their own way the concurrent testimony of the contemporary authorities to a severity of administration which made the octavians peculiarly unpopular and occasioned that hostility of the cubiculars, or court party, which formed so prominent a feature of the political life of that time.

The remaining comptrollers' accounts in this volume and that of the receiver general who, in 1596, superseded the comptroller, doubtless as an immediate consequence of the commission to the octavians, are in the same position as the comptroller's account of 1595, in respect that they also have no sederunt of lords auditors in the common form, but are vouched by the signatures of the officiating lords. If these signatures are to be taken as evidence of the personal constitution of the octavians' commission in the years to which they refer, the personnel did not remain the same, in spite of the special provision above quoted, the obvious design of which is to maintain the identity of its membership. In the account for 1597[1] only seven of the original octavians appear, the absent eighth being Carnegie of Colluthie, who did not, however, die until April 9th, 1598.[2] The others are now supplemented by Mark, lord of Newbattle, one of the lords of session, and Sir John Carmichael of that ilk, captain of the king's guards. In the following account, that for 1597–8,[3] only three of the original octavians, namely, Elphinstone, Young, and Skene, remain as signatories, Carmichael and Newbattle again signing, and three new signatures appearing, those of Sir Richard Cockburn of Clerkington, the secretary of council; Master John Preston of Fentonbarns, a senator of the college of justice; and Master Edward Bruce, advocate. In the last of these accounts, that for 1598–9,[1] only the lord president, Hamilton of Drumcairn, and Skene, the clerk register, remain of the older signatories, the new signatures being those of the Earl of Montrose, now chancellor; John Bothwell, the commendator of Holyrood House; and Sir John Cockburn of Ormiston, the justice clerk. By this time, however, the octavians had, as a special administrative body, ceased to exist. By an act of parliament of 1598[2] the king and the estates "discharge all commissions "of checker granted heretofore to any persons "whatsoever, and ordain the same to cease in time "to come."

Special instructions were given by the king to the checker thus unusually constituted and maintained. The lords were to sit at least twice a week and without "rest nor intermissioun of days "while first some stay be put to the present confu-"sion." They were to investigate the qualifications and powers of the existing fiscal officers; retrench the superfluous number of servants in his majesty's house; and do exact diligence "for "provisioning the royal household." They were to disallow gratuities, and see to it that "his "majesty's liberality be not hurtful to his estate."

They were to refuse licenses for the export of forbidden goods "until first trial be taken gif the "inhabitants of the country, being well staikit, "may spare the same." Their instructions conclude by a reference to an ordinance of the lords of council and checker enacting that all and sundry casualties (such as wards, nonentries, bastardies, liferents, and recognitions of lands) belonging to the king should be sold to "such persons as shall "pay and deliver the greatest sums of money."[1]

The succession of comptrollers during the years covered by this volume similarly exhibits traces of the uncertain condition of the royal finances. The comptroller for 1595 was Sir David Seton of Parbroth,[2] who demitted office before the account for the following year was given in. He is referred to in that account[3] as "the lait comptroller." As a result of the new fiscal administration by the octavians, no comptroller was appointed in immediate succession to him, the crown revenues being now ingathered by a new officer, constituted ad hoc, the receiver general. The scope of his authority to uplift and collect monies due to the crown was, as is indicated by the description which brings in his account of 1596–7,[4] much wider than than that of the comptroller. He is there called "general receiver to our sovereign lord of his "majesty's rents of all his receipts from his "majesty's chamberlains on both sides water of "Forth, sheriffs, stewards, bailies of burghs, cus- "tumars of burghs, tacksmen of the cunzie house "during the tack thereof, compositions of infeft- "ments as well of his majesty's property as of "annexed and kirk lands, or from his majesty's "thesaurarie present and being for the time, and "of all other receipts received by him whatsomever "manner of way." The receiver general was Henry Wardlaw of Kilbaberton, who appears again in the accounts as deputy to a later comptroller,[1] and who very shortly afterwards comes up in a record which must be taken as attesting his fall from royal favour. He appears before the privy council on the 8th of February 1598 to answer to a complaint at the instance of John Preston of Fentonbarns, who, as has been noted, was one of the auditors signing the comptroller's account for the preceding year. Fentonbarns complains that Wardlaw with accomplices, all armed with swords, pistols, and other weapons, came upon his lands of Nether Liberton, where his servants were going at the plough, and "not onlie stoppit his "said plewch, bot maist barbarouslie hurt and "straik his horse and oxen;" and, two days later, slew a grey horse belonging to him. Wardlaw admits slaying the grey horse, and is ordered to be warded within the prison house above the west kirk door of Saint Giles's kirk until set free by the king and his council.[2]

Nor was Henry Wardlaw the only extraordinary officer at this time. The "chamberlain and "receiver of fermes of the king's property south "of the Forth" in 1596 was Bernard Lindesay,[1] and "the chamberlain of the king within the northern "parts of the realm," Andrew Morison.[2] In 1597 a comptroller was again appointed, this time in the person of Walter, prior of Blantyre,[3] who seems to have acted mainly by deputy, his substitute being Henry Wardlaw; while the special chamberlains, Lindsay besouth Forth and Morison in the north, still continue to act[4]; and a third special chamberlain, George Wardlaw, appears as ingathering the revenues of the royal property "benorth Forth and south of the watter of Dee."[5] In 1598 Sir George Home of Wedderburn appears as comptroller, Henry Wardlaw, and afterwards John Johnston, acting as his deputy.[6] Wedderburn is referred to as "the late Wedderburn" in the bailies' ad extra account of 1599[7]; but the reference in quondam is to the officer, not to Wedderburn himself, for he was removed from the comptrollership before he died. His account, although it refers to his period of office, namely, the year that covered the terms of Martinmas 1598 and Whitsunday 1599, was not rendered until July 1601.[8] The circumstances attending this delay are wholly characteristic of the disorder of the time. Wedderburn had upon his appointment come under an obligation on 30th October 1598 to "furnish their majesties' houses" from the returns of the comptrollership "in all charges "belanging to his office, alsweill ordiner as extra-"ordiner"; the king engaging upon his part that "after the hearing of the said comptroller's "accounts and footing of the same," Wedderburn should be "sufficiently satisfied and paid of all his superexpenses."[1] The arrangement did not work well. In the following February there is "occasion "of complaint given to sundry of the officers of the "house of the not advancing of money for providing "of things necessary for the furnishing of said "house"; and Wedderburn, appearing by commissioners before the council, pleads that he has been defrauded in the following particulars: he has been disappointed by his majesty of "the "annuity," a payment to King James from the queen of England, which (Wedderburn contended) should have come into his account; he is damnified to the extent of five thousand merks by the appreciation of the coinage; he is further damnified in the customs by the same appreciation, in respect that the tacksmen offered twenty-eight thousand pounds before the appreciation, but since then the customs have been farmed out for twenty-four thousand pounds; there are fifteen or sixteen horses more than usual kept in the king's stables; and there have been special grants made by the king's command for keeping Dunyvaig castle and for the "horners of the property." The lords of the privy council found[1] that Wedderburn must fulfil his bond notwithstanding. Within a week he happened to be put to the horn upon another charge. Afterwards, on the 20th of February, he was duly "actit" that he must fulfil his obligations under the bond "under the pain "of deprivation from his office, confiscation of his "whole moveables, and comprising of his lands."[2] Two months later, on 17th April, the king complained to the council that the comptroller had been behaving very undutifully and negligently in the discharge of his office, and that their majesties were accordingly "like to be frustrate" of the provision of their houses this present year;[3] and on 26th April the king's advocate is maintaining to the council that Wedderburn, instead of having, as he had undertaken, honourably entertained the royal households without any trouble or "cummer," has failed in his attendance and has omitted to furnish the households, so that complaints are frequent. Most of the accounts for February, March, and April for bypast furnishings are unpaid. Wedderburn does not appear in answer to this charge, and decree is given against him on a formal complaint made by the furnishers. He is accordingly adjudged[4] to have incurred the penalties of the act above quoted. His account, when at last it did come to be rendered and audited, exhibited a balance of twenty-six thousand pounds odds in his favour as superexpenses. Meantime, in November 1599 the council had passed an act, also in his favour, which proceeds upon his undertaking to satisfy the furnishers of the royal households according to their particular accounts, and empowers him to sue for all the returns due from the crown property during his term of office. If these returns do not suffice to wipe off the balance due, his majesty promises in verbo principis to make it good, and "to assist, fortify, and main-"tain" Wedderburn in recovering it.[1]

The new comptroller is Sir David Murray of Gospartie, knight, who, although there is no comptroller's account for 1600, appears as holding the office in the accounts for 1599 and for 1600 of the bailies ad extra and the custumars and bailies of burghs.[2]

II.

The strict administration of the octavians which thus affected the general collection of the crown revenues has, naturally enough, left its mark upon those more specific accounts and papers which relate to the income from the customs. Already in 1595 a memorandum is made in the proceedings of exchequer[1] which indicates the existence of irregularities calling for correction. Order is to be taken with the burghs "anent the stulings, "videlicet, the taking out of the country of malt, "meill, and other vivers als mekle as ane ship "will ladin, and payis onelie of custom therefor "and for the said haill ship's laiding 16 "shillings." And the papers for the following year, 1596, afford an instance of one way in which the customs were evaded and the evasion checked by the auditors. The custumar of Haddington, namely, is then ordained to make a particular return of several kinds of skins enumerated—schorlings, skaldings, futefells, lamb-skins, todskins, calfskins, and so on, down to foumart skins—and to exact custom for such according to the A.B.C. of the checker,[2] and that notwithstanding any privilege or infeftment granted to the burgh. Prior to this the various sorts of skins in the Haddington account had been slumped under "hides."[3] But in the accounts for 1596 and the subsequent years, while the general head "hides" still appears, there is greater specification.[4] These, however, are only sporadic and isolated manifestations of a more far-reaching tendency which was soon to have a decisive expression in the ordinances of checker and the acts of parliament. In July 1597 the lords auditors enacted that in future all clerks of cockets in the burghs should set out in detail in the cockets issued to the traders exporting wares furth of the realm the quantity and the several kinds of such merchandise, and the names of the owners and exporters. A further act of checker, passed at the same time, ordained that cockets were only to be issued or to be passed by custumars if the applicant would "solemnatlie mak "faith and sueir be God himself, his creatour, be "his pairt of paradice, his salvatioun and con- "demnatioun," that he had no contraband aboard and no more lawful merchandise than was mentioned in the cocket. If the oath were refused, custumars were empowered to arrest the ship and all its cargo. Another act empowered all custumars and searchers within the kingdom to arrest all ships that had either no cocket or a cocket that did not answer the conditions imposed by the prior acts. Such ships and the wares in them were to be escheat to the king, to be uptaken by the treasurer, and accounted for in the checker.[1]

In these measures and ordinances of exchequer is to be seen a reflection of a policy which had a noticeable effect upon the legislation of this period, the policy of more strictly enforcing and more widely enlarging the laws regulating the customs. An act anent the customs was passed in 1597[2] which, proceeding upon a preamble that set out the practice of foreign nations, imposed a duty upon "all cloth and other wares and mer-"chandise whatsomever to be brought within the "realm by his majesty's subjects at all time here-"after," and appointed commissioners to "set "down the A.B.C." of such customs and to fix the prices of imported wares. The scope of this measure must have been at first found to be too wide; for the act was followed by another in the same year,[1] which, while ratifying and confirming its main purport, expressly laid down that its provisions were not to be extended to earls, lords, barons, and freeholders, for whom it was declared lawful to bring into or take out of the kingdom goods for their own use, though not for market. At the same time, the end of 1597, was passed an act prohibiting the export of wool in spite of any licenses granted by his majesty to the contrary; the king engaging not to grant any such licenses or dispensations in future; and another act forbade the import of English cloth and woollen goods made in England. This cloth (the statute said) "had only "for the most part an outward show, wanting that "substance and strength which ofttimes it appears "to have and being one of the chief causes of the "transporting of all gold and silver furth of this "realm, and consequently of the great scarcity and "present dearth of the coin now current within the "same." It is interesting to note in this connection that there appears in the account for 1598 of the custumar of Edinburgh[1] an item of £300, the sum remitted by him to the lairds of Newbattle and Tracquair as the proceeds of wool exported by them by special license of the king. The period of this yearly account runs from July 1597; so it is only right to assume that the royal license was issued before the passing of the statute. The account for 1597 of the custumar of Aberdeen[2] illustrates the difficulty of standardising the customs. The accountant brings in duties on salmon, woollen cloth, and other goods; but these appear to have been charged according to some rule fixed by local usage, for the lords auditors find it necessary particularly to direct that in future he shall levy the custom of woollen cloth, salmon, and other customable goods according to the A B.C. of the checker and the acts of parliament.

The custumars' accounts of 1598[3] distinguish between goods customed before 1st March 1597 and those customed afterwards. The receipts from the former class were paid to the comptroller as usual. Those from the latter were paid to Thomas Foulis, who had a tack of the customs from that date. The corresponding accounts for 1599[4] show a similar division. The first set of payments is to Thomas Foulis by virtue of a tack to him and Robert Jousie from 1st March 1597 to 1st March 1598. The second set goes to the comptroller for customs during November 1598. The third set goes to Bernard Lindsay, lessee of customs. The comptroller's account of 1598-9[1] records the receipt from Bernard Lindsay and his partners, tacksmen of the whole customs of the burghs, of £20,000 for the year to November 1598, and of £10,136 13s. 4d. for the six months immediately preceding November 1599. This last entry gives the name of Archibald Primrose as one of Lindsay's partners in the tack. That disputes arose between the lessees and the burgh officials, and that the adjustment of their several claims was matter of contention in the checker—circumstances likely enough in themselves—are attested by the docquet appended to the account for 1599 of the custumar of Edinburgh,[2] which shows that the tacksman Foulis had contested the statements of the local custumar and prevented this particular account from being passed until he was content to accept it.

A statute of July 1599[3] shows that the customs laws had been evaded because of the want of means by which wares aboard ship which had been customed could be distinguished from uncustomed goods. All the custumars in the country are accordingly ordered to have a seal made with two halves, "one half to contain Jacobus Rex "with his highness' arms and crown" and the other half the name of the burgh. A lead marked with this stamp is to be hung to every "wobe, the transition from mediæval to modern times. It is an ordinance of exchequer[1] requiring all the sheriffs in future to pay a composition in money for the duties formerly exigible from those vassals of the crown whose lands had been granted them to be held blench, or, as the charters put it, in alba firma. It is accompanied by a table of the specific sums to be exacted in room of the various blench-fermes.

The blench holding was a sort of curiosity of the feudal system. In its primary manifestation a feu was a grant of land made in consideration of an obligation to perform some service, originally a military service, to the superior. In blench there was no service of any kind exigible, but a trifling annual return for the lands was exacted as a symbol of the acknowledgment by the vassal of the lordship of the superior. So little importance was attached to this kind of reddendo that the charters, after setting forth the provision for the payment of the ferme in its fanciful form of a pair of gilt spurs, or a mirror, or a fidder of hay, or whatever it might be, generally added the words si petatur tantum, to indicate that the return was due only when it was asked for. In a later development of the insignificance of this particular rent, the practice of the law still further minimised it by interpreting the words of style, si petatur tantum to mean si petatur intra annum, so that, if the ferme were not ingathered within a year of the date when it fell due, no claim for it could afterwards be successfully pursued.

Now, at the present day feudalism is no more than what a sociologist would call a rudimentary survival in the technology of law, and the landlord's interest in the land is no longer for service, military or agricultural, or for acknowledgment of superiority. It is a pecuniary interest. But in the years which immediately followed the reformation of religion and the secularisation of so many parcels of land hitherto ecclesiastical, the distinction between the ancient and the modern form of return from land was not so clearly defined or understood. The schedule of values appended to the ordinance of exchequer shows in a remarkably interesting way the beginning of the last stage of the long transition in that form of holding which the agreement of the authorities on Scots conveyancing[1] pronounces to be already the most divergent from the original nature of a feu. The checker enacted in 1596 that the blench-fermes hitherto ingathered by the sheriffs should be commuted into money; and, notwithstanding the fact that an act of parliament was passed in 1606[2] declaring that vassals holding in blench were not liable unless the dues were demanded, the exchequer continued to exact them even when they had not been demanded, until in more modern times the anomaly was removed by the practice of the crown conveyancers, who generally converted the older blench dues into a stated pecuniary obligation when called upon to make new investitures.

The schedule of values given in the appendix to this volume exhibits to what figure the first commutation worked out in money. Oddly enough, the initial item on the list of reddendoes may be described as itself a transitional and not a final conversion. "For ilk pair of gilt spurs," the item runs, "one rose noble." Now, the rose noble of England had been in 1594—two years before the checker's enactment of the commutations—the subject of an order by the privy council prohibiting its circulation as currency in Scotland.[1] The coin had, indeed, been made current again by special proclamation at Aberdeen for the expressed purpose of paying the soldiery; but, as a blench-ferme, it still has, in comparison with the money-payments for which the other dues of this kind were exchanged, almost as much the character of a symbol as have the gilt spurs which it replaces. It is not yet Scots money, but still a token of value. The other conversions are clearly enough into currency. A penny money is replaced by a penny "usual money"; a silver penny by tenpence; a broad-arrow head by two shillings; and a broad-arrow itself by ten shillings, as much as a pound of wax, a hen, or a ganyie—a ganyie being the kind of arrow that was shot from a cross-bow, a quarrel. Thirteen shillings and fourpence is the money value set against a pound of cummin, a wild duck, and a hawk hood respectively; twenty shillings represents a pair of white spurs, or a load of hay, or a cheese; thirty shillings, a hawking glove; forty shillings, a pair of dog-collars; three pounds, a pair of gloves; six pounds thirteen shillings and fourpence, a fidder of hay; twenty pounds, a mirror or a hawk; and forty pounds, a red mantle; while "the price of ane cowdeche to "ane prebendar or cheplane" was set at twelve shillings. A cowdach, or colpindach, is a young cow that has never calved. Skene so explains it in his De Verborum Significatione[1]; and, as it happens, Skene's signature as clerk register is adhibited to this schedule of values.

The element of fancy in the blench-ferme has always appealed to romancers,[2] who make the most of its chivalrous suggestion that this tenure leaves the fidelity of the vassal uncompromised by any considerations of a sordid nature. It has even seduced the learned Erskine into the single joke which sparkles

> "Fair as a star, when only one > Is shining in the sky."

upon the pages of his austere and monumental exposition of Scots Law. Our schedule of values, however, should put right such aberrations of a too partial mediævalism, and show how the coming in of modern institutions makes loyal service pan out into hard cash.
